

TRAVEL

it's all downhill from here

Skiers glide through the powder at Deer Valley Resort.

Majestic Park City, Utah, caters to skiers of every age and skill level and does it with style and pizzazz.

DAN CAMPBELL, COURTESY PARK CITY CHAMBER OF COMMERCE AND VISITORS BUREAU

BY ANNE Z. COOKE AND STEVE HAGGERTY
Cox News Service

PARK CITY, Utah

For Dillon Cook, sitting across from us in the gondola, the Canyons was a whole new world peopled with kids who came from everywhere just to be in ski class with him. * "I liked the Tunnel of Fun," said the 9-year-old from Houston, describing the bumpy trail through the trees where the instructors take their classes to cut loose. "We had five boys and one girl," he said, ticking off the names.

"Dean, Ivan, Bruce, Hans and me. The girl was Ally, and she was better than any of the boys." * Sherri Williams from Atlanta, on the last day of her vacation, noticed the Canyons' people-friendly design, a terraced layout that separates cars on the lower level from the Resort Village at midlevel, a pedestrian zone with the ticket office, rental shops, restaurants and the Grand Summit Hotel. * "The cabriolet saves a lot of walking," she said, meaning the canlike baskets (nicknamed "the teacups") that carry skiers from the parking lot up to the village. And Red Pine Lodge, tucked into the forest at midmountain, was brilliant. "No traffic, no cars, no noise — just us and the snow," she said. * Then there was Brian Price, wiry and tan. Taking advantage of two inches of new snow, the Salt Lake City resident was steering out-of-town friends around the first of this former mining town's ski trio: the Canyons, Deer Valley and Park City Mountain Resort. With 8,925 acres to cover, he was in a hurry. * "I stick to the highlights," he explained — the new terrain parks, the best-groomed cruisers and the photo-friendly vistas. The speedy new "six-pack" chairlifts, too. "But the Canyon's my favorite."

PARK CITY, 4F

INSIDE: WHAT'S HOT AT PARK CITY * THE
CANYONS * DEER
VALLEY RESORT *
LODGING AND ACCOMMODATIONS

Skiers and snowboarders keep moving on Park City Mountain Resort's 3,300 skiable acres.

PHOTO BY DAN CAMPBELL, COURTESY PARK CITY CHAMBER OF COMMERCE AND VISITORS BUREAU

IF YOU GO

Getting there: Fly into Salt Lake City International Airport, which is 36 miles from Park City. Rent a car or take an airport shuttle. All Resort Express will pick you up, for $70 per person, round trip. 800-457-9457, allresort.com.

Where to eat:

- The Snowed Inn. Bring the kids for a horse-drawn sleigh ride at Park City Resort. Chow-line chuck wagon dinners include roast beef, chicken or trout, with Caesar salad, Dutch oven potatoes, veggies and chili. Adults, $79, children, $49. 866-647-3310, snowedinnleigh.com.
- Wasatch Brew Pub, 250 Main St., Park City. Local beer and a casual atmosphere. Steaks, trout, spaghetti and chicken, and soups and salad. 435-649-0900.
- Fireside Dining at Empire Canyon Lodge. Swiss Alpine and American cuisine served Wednesday through Friday evenings. Reservations available through Deer Valley Resort or call 435-645-6632.
- Western Barbecue (435-615-3446) and Lookout Cabin (435-615-2892) on the slopes at the Canyons. Call or make reservations through the resort.

Equipment rental: Black Tie Ski Rentals comes to your door, bringing a choice of skis, boots and poles for the entire family. All equipment is preselected to match your preferences and sizes, and fine-tuned upon delivery. If you don't like your skis, Black Tie's experts will bring you another pair to try on short notice.

The rentals cost us a little more, but the skis were demo-quality, and the entire visit took only an hour, saving us the trip to a rental shop. Reserve via e-mail at parkcity@blacktieskis.com or call 800-821-4754.

When you stay: If you're skiing with in the of family or friends, sharingly equipped kitchen and laundry facilities; most have Internet access and hot tubs.

Information:

- Park City Convention and Visitors Bureau: 800-435-1360, parkcityinfo.com
- Salt Lake City Vacation Planning: 800-541-4955, ski-saltlake.com
- R&R Property Management: 800-348-6759, parkcitylodging.com
- The Canyons: 888-226-9667, thecanyons.com
- Park City Mountain Resort: 800-222-7275, parkcitymountain.com
- Deer Valley: 800-424-3337, deervalley.com

Park City

(continued from Page 1F)

WIDE-OPEN CANYONS

We fell for the Canyons. Strung in a ragged crescent above Park City, the three ski resorts are part of the same range and even the same ridge, called the Wasatch Back. Yet we'd forgotten how different each are from another.

The Canyons, its 3,700 acres open and uncrowded, is a bona fide best-kept secret. Spread over adjacent ridges, the resort's 152 trails flow and turn, challenging and entertaining in turn.

The heart of the resort is Red Pine Lodge, where the gondola unloads and ski school meets. A half-dozen lifts climb from here to near and distant peaks, each Plenty of expert-only chutes, most rated double-black-diamond, plunge into Murdock Bowl and off Apex Ridge. But the Canyons really seems to be a bonanza for intermediate recreational skiers, people who are happiest carving turns on groomed trails.

On the lower slopes, look for a tangle of woodland trails providing ski-in, ski-out access to a cluster of multimillion-dollar homes. Spawnd by the real estate greed that (sadly) drives most contemporary resort development, some of these places, big enough to sleep 20 of your closest friends, are actually in the rental pool.

Mainly, the Canyons is so spacious and spread out that you need a trail map just to find a restaurant. Chili and hot dogs are staples at some of the mountain's five chow lines. Pass them up for Lookout Cabin, where you'll dine on gourmet cuisine, with tablecloths, wine and 30-mile views. Or get down and jitterbug on Saturdays at Western Barbecue at Red Pine Lodge. Beef, chicken and the trimmings come with a live country band.

WHAT'S HOT AT PARK CITY

We rented a cottage in Park the thing to do. The base area — bustling with skiers coming and going, window shoppers, kids waiting for their parents and newcomers renting skis — felt like a block party in progress.

The adult and kids' ski schools meet on the snow across the square. Beyond is the Alpine Coaster, where we bumped into George, a 14-year-old local boy with a buzz-cut and an opinion.

"Park City's a nine on a scale of 10," he said, digging out money for a third ride on the over-snow roller coaster that opened last season.

The coaster, Park City resort's newest family diversion, is so hot that the ride was forced to take reservations. We showed up at 2 p.m. to risk the nine-minute ride in the bobsled-shaped car, which climbs slowly up a 6,000-foot-long track and rockets down around hairpin curves at avalanche speed.

With Park City's 3,300 skiable acres, you can keep moving all day and never ski the same run twice. But if you want to ski with the little nippers, head for the slopes under the King Con and Motherlode chairlifts. Parallel runs, most intermediate but a few rated for experts, make it easy for parents and kids to split up and still meet at the bottom of the chairlift.

You can design a route to suit everyone, using the resort's newest and smartest service, the Personal Mountain Planner.

This computer program creates custom routes depending on your skill level, desired terrain and a challenge quotient. The information desk in the Legacy Lodge will do it for you on site or you can do it yourself at home, at mymountainplanner.com. For example: "Exit right off Bonanza lift. Take Homerun to Claimjumper. Board Silverlode lift."

Park City resort's real claim to fame — its link to Park City's early history — lends a genuine sense of authenticity. Century-old structures, restored or stabilized, have been left in place on the mountain, many next to the ski runs. More than 1,200 miles of abandoned mining shafts are still there, too, a reminder that skiing's a late arrival.

DEER VALLEY RESORT

comes closer. The resort upgrades its chairlifts regularly, improves grooming and restyles its restaurants. But it's the people that lift skiing from a sport to a culture.

At the entrance, valets took our skis and carried them up the steps. Every lift attendant made sure we sat together and safely, and handed us dropped gloves and poles. Mountain hosts were on duty at the top, offering assistance. The trails were well-marked and the signs easy to read from a distance.

Deer Valley, with 1,825 acres, is half the size of the Canyons. But the mix of beginner, intermediate and expert trails off Bald and Flagstaff mountains meant we could ski together or separately and still meet for lunch at the Royal Street Cafe at midmountain. With a limit of 6,500 lift tickets sold daily, there were few crowds, either on the slopes or in the lift lines. But the cap has nothing to do with skiing, it seems, and everything to do with eating lunch. It is, in fact, the total number of seats available at noon in the resort's on-mountain restaurants.

By chance, former Olympic gold medalist Stein Eriksen, a legend at Deer Valley, happened to be at the next table. Typically gracious, he leaned over to offer a few words of welcome. Eriksen, who will be 80 this year, likes to get out and meet people, even skiing along for a few runs. Who knows? You could be lucky.

REKINDLE YOUR SENSE OF ADVENTURE

GOOD

Midwest Getaways